The economic crisis has revealed three particularly vulnerable development in Russia in the last decade: a growing resource of expertise, aging equipment and the lag in scientific and technological progress, institutional obstacles to the growth of the market economy. The article discusses the components of economic growth. On November 6, Dr. Klaus Boehnke, Deputy Director of the HSE Centre for Sociocultural Research, presented his report entitled 'Does COVID-19 propel value change: A comparison of Germany and the United Kingdom?' at the 'Culture Matters' research seminar. HSE News Service has talked to Dr. Boehnke about various aspects of the value changes and socio-economic consequences of the pandemic in Europe and Russia. 11 November 2020. And as Russia develops a new commercial legislative framework and a tax system, it is also timely to consider the framework that was in place on Russian territory in 1917. On the eve of the World War I, Russia was the world's largest debtor. Its currency was backed by Cite this Item. The record of economic growth and structural change in the Soviet Union after 1928 is sufficiently well known.' This chapter compares the pattern of economic growth in the late tsarist era with that of the Soviet Union during the era of central planning. The main question being asked is: Did the industrialization drive "pay off" in terms of added growth during the Soviet period? This chapter analyzes the era of central planning through 1985. In 1985 Gorbachev decided to change the economic system.
