Author Biography

Desmond Hurley

Desmond Hurley was a marine biologist with the New Zealand Oceanographic Institute of the DSIR, now NIWA. More recently he has worked as Science Editor and general consultant on Harry Orsman’s Oxford Dictionary of New Zealand English, and has a watching brief for new words and usages. While working for the Dictionary on the WWI new letter for New Zealand troops in Europe, Chronicles of the NZEF, he came across references to New Zealand prisoners of war in Turkey which led him to write a full-length book, to give a Stout Centre seminar on the subject, and to write this study of Edward Opotiki Mousley.

Want to Read saving… A prisoner of war (POW) is a non-combatant—whether a military member, an irregular military fighter, or a civilian—who is held captive by a belligerent power during or immediately after an armed conflict. The earliest recorded usage of the phrase “prisoner of war” dates back to 1610. Belligerents hold prisoners of war in custody for a range of legitimate and illegitimate reasons, such as isolating them from the enemy combatants still in the field (releasing and repatriating them in an orderly manner These are recommendation lists which contains War Prisoner. You should give them a visit if you're looking for similar novels to read. Alternatively, you can also create your own list. Here, I’d like to point out how awesome the author is for putting in a scene that left me speechless: A dead soldier is roughly buried in a more>> sand dune and his body is shown under the barely there sand, wounds open and bleeding. Yeah, that really got to me. Su Yi and his army are taken hostage and at first the king tortures Su Yi just to torture him, but then it pisses him off that he isn’t able to break Su Yi, so he systematically tears down everything that Su Yi holds sacred, until he is (non-metaphorically speaking) under the king.
