God's desire to reveal himself versus humankind's inherent obstacles to discerning His revelation

Van Niekerk, Garth

URI: <http://hdl.handle.net/2263/30374>

Date: 2012-01-13

Abstract:

This thesis looks into the inherent obstacles humankind faces in correctly discerning God's consistent self-revelation through multiple mediums. It then delves into Scripture's discernment principles to find means by which to overcome these obstacles and so counter deception.

will long to die, and death flees from them. - New American Standard Version (1995). And in those days men shall seek death, and shall in no wise find it; and they shall desire to die, and death fleeth from them. - American Standard Version (1901). Thank God Christ died for our sins, delivering us from the day of his wrath. We can't die for sins that have been already died for. View Thread Report. The Revealed God (Latin: deus revelatus) in Christian theology is a term coined by Martin Luther which affirms that the ultimate self-revelation of God is in his hiddenness. It is the particular focus of Luther's work the Heidelberg Theses of 1518, presented during the Heidelberg disputation of 1518. In Christian theology, God is presented as revealed or 'deus revelatus' through the suffering of Jesus Christ on the cross. Debate of the term is found in the field of 'Philosophy of Religion,' where it
