TYPES OF MULCH

Wood Chips – perennials, shrubs, trees and pathways

Leaves – veggie gardens, perennials, shrubs, trees

Compost – veggie gardens, annual flower beds

Straw – veggie gardens, perennials

Manufactured Sawdust and Manure Mix – annual flowerbeds, perennials, shrubs, trees, paths

Gravel – paths

Bark – not recommended unless well composted – leaches nutrients, often has added dyes, no nutritive content, compacts, sheds water

BEST PRACTICES FOR IRRIGATION SYSTEMS

Automatic Irrigation Systems

- Use smart timers that allow for shut off during rain
- Set clock to water a short cycle then longer cycle which allows water to soak in better
- Water early in the morning when water pressure is best
- Check sprinkler head patterns to avoid missing your target!

Drip Systems

- Use the right emitter for the situation
- Use a timer attached to the system to allow for adequate coverage

Soaker Hoses

- Bury under mulch to reduce evaporation
- Do not lay out more than 100 feet of hose in one line – lower pressure at the end of the line
- Start uphill and run water down the hose

Hand Watering

- Use the right tool for the right job – long handled wands, wands with shut off and multiple spray patterns, watering cans
- Avoid circling roots
- When and how to plant bare root
- Loosening a root ball
- Depth and width of hole relative to the root ball
