Abstract

The early years of the twentieth century were considered as the most significant years in the history of England. Many changes took place. There was a rapid advance in science and technology, education expanded, and the state of women improved a great deal. Yet, on the other hand, England also witnessed the break out of two devastating world wars, World War I (1914-1918) and World War II (1939-1945). One of the major literary figures of this period is David Herbert Lawrence (1885-1930). He is a prolific writer, with his output of novels, short stories, poems, plays, essays, translations and travel books. In his work he has reflected his ideas, beliefs and philosophy. I am such a sucker for DH Lawrence. I don't know why. Other than Kundera he's probably my all-time favourite novelist. I pretty much consider his writing perfect— maybe not objectively the best, I don't know anything about that, but the best for me. Like, if I could design my perfect writer, that would be Lawrence. He combines the dark symbolism of Poe with the melodramatic emotions and gusty depth of Emily Bronte. Like both of those writers, he also writes worlds that have such surreal symmetry I am such a sucker for DH Lawrence. I don't know why. Other than Kundera he's probably my all-time ... colors to suggest the underlying implications of the events taking place. Three colors in particular - red, black, and white - seem to carry some sort of subtle connotation which reveals more about the characters, their actions, and their motives for those actions, than the plot or the setting alone. Mrs. Morel's garden scene at the close of chapter one, and the Trent river passage of chapter twelve are examples to showcase Lawrence's use of landscape, which conveys the psychic aspects of life, especially the unconscious and sexuality.
