Abstract

My work references images from social media to construct a world that exists somewhere between our physical world and the digital. I do this to help me understand how our reliance on technology, and our use of social media affects how we process information. I examine the cultural implications this media saturation has had, or will have on our society. Specifically, I am looking at the "digital divide." My work explores the divide between the way we often think and behave online, and how it differs from our offline self. This is accomplished by elevating the value of the original image through paint. Using a high key palette, I construct an image that is more synthetic than the original to emphasize the absurd nature of the original image. The synthetic image I create is done to make my world more interesting than our actual world. However, the world I am creating is also ambiguous and confusing. My paintings depict spaces that suggest an exaggerated version of reality. I use images that are heavily constructed. I then distort the image to emphasize the constructed qualities of our image world. This is done to provoke the viewer's imagination and have them evaluate the image differently than they typically would. I am inviting them to contemplate the absurd nature of our world, and contemplate how they contribute to its creation.

'He's still alive after that attack How high is his HP? Or, is it a skill?' It would be a lie if Izroth said that he was not shocked by Roudin's level of durability. Izroth believed that he had underestimated just how far the level and stat gap was between the two of them. Then again, he knew that this selection was not truly meant for players to participate in to begin with, especially someone with his level. Thanks to his 6% lifesteal, Izroth regained all the HP he lost when performing the Element Fusion and returned to full he Realm of Alters. 2,266 likes · 56 talking about this. The Realm of Lucira is a free HTML-text based game taking place in a medieval high fantasy world. You may create your own Character with their own Background, Race, Appearance, Traits and Skills. After that, the game becomes a sandbox where the player essentially forges their own experience based on their choices. Whilst every Background has(or will have) their own unique story quest, the world will not treat you like the chosen one or give you any main quest to save it. By the time he died in 1987, Andy Warhol's notoriety extended far beyond the rarified confines of the New York art world, beyond the fifteen minutes of fame he predicted for everyone's future, and into the vast realm of pop-culture. Warhol's public image was no less fascinating or controversial than his portraits of Campbell's soup cans, Brillo boxes, and movie stars.
