Jack B. Yeats: Journey in Consciousness

Buck, Richard

Abstract
Jack B. Yeats (1871-1957) was an Irish artist and writer. His art evolved from the representational to something much more abstract. By examining six paintings covering the early, the middle, and the late periods of his life, I have endeavored to demonstrate a distinct shift in Jack B. Yeats from the mental structure of consciousness to the emergence of the integral structure of consciousness, as described by Gebser (1984). Artistic evidence of a shift in his consciousness is supplemented by a critical reading of one of his novels. Secondary sources were consulted to gain insight into the literary works that I have not read, and to explore the various contexts within which he worked and lived.

Jack B Yeats is the brother of the Nobel Laureate poet WB Yeats and won acclaim in his own right as one of the most significant Irish artists of the 20th century. A Horseman Enters a Town at Night. A weary traveller, slumped on his steed, walks through an empty street perhaps in search of an inn or somewhere to rest up before continuing his journey in the morning. The horse which symbolised loyalty, intelligence and freedom to Yeats, carries the rider, its head turned slightly, possibly being drawn to a noise or a light showing they are not alone on their journey. Even very late at night, the horse may also be an element of the night's atmosphere. The painting marked Yeats’s growing interest in Expressionism and his adoption of fluid brushwork and a charged palette. You may also like. Yeats Archive. The sket

Generally it is difficult for us to define Yeats as he is a symbolic, Romantic, modernistic poet. "The Lake Isle of Innisfree" is one of his early poems and his representative. Though a poem with only 12 lines, it has many remarkable and prominent characteristics. First of all, the unified rhythm makes us hear in it a children’s song. To him, melody is an important thing as in this poem. Then, I see him use simultaneously pastoral, sensual, colorful images in "The Lake Isle of Innisfree." Jack of All Trades, Master of None? Don't screw with me! Such thoughts and wishes were for naught as my consciousness faded, when I came too I was standing on a green foggy hill.
