Himalayas: An Aesthetic Adventure. By PRATAPADITYA PAL, with contributions to Amy Heller, Oskar von Hinuber, and Gautama V. Vajracharya. Chicago: ART INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO, in association with UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA PRESS and MAPIN PUBLISHING, 2003. Pp. 308, plates, map. $65 (cloth); $39.95 (paper).

The pages of this beautifully illustrated exhibition catalogue both bring together some of the Himalayas' most illustrious and well-known pieces, and display, for the first time, lesser-known gems from this mountainous world. These images, and the accompanying text, are organized into three cohesive sections, corresponding to specific geographic regions. These three sections, which constitute the bulk of the 308-page catalogue, are preceded by a general introduction to Himalayan art and followed by a helpful appendix furnishing translations of many of the Nepali, Kashmiri, and Tibetan inscriptions on the works. These insightful translations are rendered by three eminent scholars: Amy Heller, Oskar von Hinuber, and Gautama V. Vajracharya.

This elegant catalogue provides a rich venue for acquainting a newcomer with this complex and vast body of Himalayan work; the initiated, however, will find that parts of the catalogue, especially the introduction, tend toward oversimplified ideas about sacred art, the artist,...

"Himalayas: An Aesthetic Adventure" at the Art Institute of Chicago features 187 Hindu and Buddhist devotional and ritual objects from India, Tibet, Nepal and Bhutan. The paintings, sculptures and other works, from public and private collections worldwide, date from the sixth to the 19th centuries. Highlights include gem-inlaid bronzes, vividly colored paintings on palm leaves and other media, and stone and wood temple carvings portraying Hindu deities, the Buddha or other important spiritual guides. A program of lectures, tours and performances complements the exhibit. T Himalayas: An 'Aesthetic Adventure'. November 2003 · The Burlington Magazine. R Morris. The aesthetic dimension of travelling is filtered through a physical engagement with the landscape itself, elevating the body as the main instrument of both geographer and artist. In this paper, Conway's experimental travel performances into geography is explored by looking at his approach to 'climbing' in his pioneering travel books, beautifully illustrated by A.D.
