During the inter-war period, the German Press Office had made a substantial investment of this nature in Mexico’s press media. At the outset of the war, the British Consul General calculated that they would require at least 500 pounds a month to undertake an extensive and effective publicity effort to wield “control over well-established local papers with morning and afternoon editions.” Use of propaganda. Propaganda poster “German women, think of your children – Vote Hitler”. Propaganda is information spread to promote a political cause and to persuade people of a certain point of view. Information about what the Nazis believed in and who they blamed for Germany’s dire situation was effectively spread by the Party’s propaganda machine. Hitler put Josef Goebbels in charge of Nazi propaganda. The Nazis used simple slogans to introduce their ideas and to make them appeal to the ordinary people of Germany. At the same time Goebbels prevented those... who opposed Nazi policies from expressing their views. This helped ensure only Nazi messages got across to the public. The Nazi organisation. The Nazi Party was extremely organised. In 90 days, the treaty will enter into force, cementing a categorical ban on nuclear weapons, 75 years after their first use," the statement said. Prior to the TPNW's adoption, nuclear weapons were the only weapons of mass destruction not banned under international law, despite their "catastrophic humanitarian consequences," according to the statement. "This is a new chapter for nuclear disarmament. Decades of activism have achieved what many said was impossible: nuclear weapons are banned," ICAN's Executive Director Beatrice Fihn was quoted as saying.
