The Strength of a Dream: A Daughter's Portrait of a Northwest Children’s Author and Illustrator

Skye Burn

Sylvia Tag, Western Washington University

Description
Author and multi-dimensional artist Skye Burn discusses the life and legacy of her mother, award-winning children's book author and illustrator Doris Burn, and shares anecdotes of her family's life on Waldron Island. Doris (Wernstedt) Burn authored and illustrated the 1965 classic Andrew Henry's Meadow, and wrote or illustrated a range of other well-known children's books. During the second half of the event, Sylvia Tag (Librarian and Curator of the Children's Interdisciplinary Children's Literature Collection) facilitates a conversation about Doris Burn's work.

Mordcai Gerstein, a children’s author and illustrator whose imaginative, exuberant works included a celebrated picture book in which he set out to “resurrect” the fallen World Trade Center towers — if only on the page — by retelling the true story of a French tightrope walker who once crisscrossed the air between them, died Sept. Subscribe today. The cause was esophageal cancer, said his wife, Susan Yard Harris. Mr. Gerstein did not begin illustrating children’s books until he was nearly 40, after working for more than a decade in film and TV animation. He found in picture books a vehicle of expression far more magical than any television screen, one with limitless possibilities for exploration and discovery. AD. Bedtime these days is about reading your children self-reflective picture books about loving oneself and the planet, says Charlotte Cripps, as well new potential classics by the best authors. “Actually, it’s just a shame that we gradually reduce illustrations from fiction as children get older. Picture books are such a wonderful way for children to really get absorbed into books and makes learning to read for pleasure so much more natural.
