Life in a pear tree

Abstract

The novel portion of this project, Life in a Pear Tree, is a fictional autobiography that tells the story of the American author’s short time managing a London pub. To assist in understanding the experience, a fairy tale story is woven through the real life events, inviting the reader to question truth and fact, fantasy and reality. Chapter one of the accompanying critical portion provides a background of fairy tale stories and the issues with defining the term. It also introduces P.L. Travers as an expert in the study of fairy tale and examines her little-known writings on fairy tale and related topics. Chapter two discusses autobiographical writing and its construction, examining the idea of truth vs. fact in regards to memory and creating a personal narrative. Chapter three introduces Travers’ Mary Poppins novels as potential fairy tale writing, and explores the idea of subversion within the books. Lastly, Chapter four binds together the previous chapters’ discussion of fairy tale, autobiography, reality, memory, and truth with the idea of looking beyond the surface. This chapter invites the reader to consider the duality of human nature by examining Travers, fairy tale stories, Mary Poppins, and Life in a Pear Tree. The background of the novel’s creation and examination of the various characters and themes is the main focus.

But does the pear fall far from the tree? In familial beats closest to Ceylan's early works featuring his own parents (namely, The Town and Clouds of May ), "Pear Tree" slowly reveals the answer we had known all along. Sinan's allegorical decline starts when he reaches the height of his egotism in another serendipitous encounter; among the film's most memorable. In a film where every character is intricately built and even those with single scenes can easily lead their own movie, it is odd that Sinan's sister Yasemin ( Asena Keskinci ) never receives her defining moment. 'The Wild Pear Tree' had been shot in about 14 weeks in Western Anatolia. The documentary is a total of 6 hours and 30 minutes long and presented here in three parts with optional English subtitles. An ancient pear tree felled to make way for the HS2 rail line "lives on" after 100 saplings were "grafted" from it. Shuttleworth College, in Old Warden, Bedfordshire, propagated the Cubbington Pear in 2017, before it was cut down. Paul Labous, lecturer in horticulture, said it was a "tragedy" the "beautiful" 250-year-old tree was taken down, but about 40 saplings have been planted. The original, from Warwickshire, was voted the best tree in England in 2015 in a Woodland Trust poll. "In years to come there are going to be not just one tree, but many, so in a way that bit is a good news story, but it's still a tragedy that it had to be cut down in the first place."
