West, Forrest Stanley as Charles "Charlie" Wilder, and Creighton Hale as Paul Jones. The plot revolves around the death of Cyrus West, who is Annabelle, Charlie, and Paul's uncle, and the reading of his will 20 years later. Annabelle inherits her uncle's fortune, but when she and her family spend the night in his haunted mansion they are stalked by a mysterious figure. Meanwhile, a lunatic known as "the Cat" escapes from an asylum and hides in the mansion.

The film is part of a genre of comedy horror films inspired by 1920s Broadway stage plays. Paul Leni's adaptation of Willard's play blended expressionism with humor, a style Leni was notable for and critics recognized as unique. Leni's style of directing made The Cat and the Canary influential in the "old dark house" genre of films popular from the 1930s through the 1950s. The film was one of Universal's early horror productions and is considered "the cornerstone of Universal's school of horror."[1] The play has been filmed five other times, with the most notable in 1939 starring comedic actor Bob Hope and Paulette Goddard.

Plot

In a decaying mansion overlooking the Hudson River, millionaire Cyrus West approaches death. His greedy family descends upon him like "cats around a canary", causing him to become insane. West orders that his last will and testament remain locked in a safe and go unread until the 20th anniversary of his death. As the appointed time arrives, West's lawyer, Roger Crosby (Tully Marshall), discovers that a second will mysteriously appeared in the safe. The second will may only be opened if the terms of the first will are not fulfilled. The caretaker of the West mansion, Mammy Pleasant (Martha Mattox), blames the manifestation of the second will on the ghost of Cyrus West, a notion that the astonished Crosby quickly rejects.

As midnight approaches, West's relatives arrive at the mansion: nephews Harry Blythe (Arthur Edmund Carewe), Charles "Charlie" Wilder, Paul Jones, his sister Susan Sillsby (Flora Finch) and her niece Cecily Young (Gertrude Astor), and niece Annabelle West. Cyrus West's fortune is bequeathed to the most distant relative bearing the name West: Annabelle. The will, however, stipulates that to inherit the fortune, she must be judged sane by a doctor, Ira Lazar (Lucien Littlefield). If she is deemed insane, the fortune is passed to the person named in the second will. The fortune includes the West diamonds which her uncle hid years ago. Annabelle realizes that she is now like her uncle, "in a cage surrounded by cats."

While the family prepares for dinner, a guard (George Siegmann) barges in and announces that an escaped lunatic called the Cat is either in the house or on the grounds. The guard tells Cecily, "He's a maniac who thinks he's a cat, and tears his victims like they were canaries!" Meanwhile, Crosby suspects someone in the family might try to harm Annabelle and decides to inform her of her successor. Before he speaks the person's name, a hairy hand with long nails emerges from a secret passage in a bookshelf and pulls him in, terrifying Annabelle. When she explains what happened to Crosby, the family immediately concludes that she is insane.

Annabelle examines a note slipped to her which reveals the location of the family jewels, fashioned into an elaborate necklace. She follows the note's instructions and soon discovers the hiding place, in a secret panel above the fireplace. She retires for the night, wearing the diamond-encrusted necklace and begins to toss and turn.

While Annabelle sleeps, the same mysterious hand emerges from the wall behind her bed and snatches the diamonds from her neck. Once again, her sanity is questioned, but as Harry and Annabelle search the room, they discover a hidden passage in the wall and in it the corpse of Roger Crosby. Mammy Pleasant leaves to call the police, while Harry searches for the guard; Susan runs away in hysterics and hitches a ride with a milkman (Joe Murphy). Paul and Annabelle return to her room... to search for the missing envelope, and discover that Crosby's body is missing. Paul vanishes as the secret passage closes behind him. Wandering in the hidden passages, Paul is attacked by the Cat and left for dead. He regains consciousness in time to rescue Annabelle. The police arrive and arrest the Cat, who is Charlie Wilder in disguise; the guard is his accomplice. Wilder is the person named in the second will; he hoped to drive Annabelle insane so that he could receive the inheritance.

Cast

- Laura La Plante as Annabelle West
- Creighton Hale as Paul Jones
- Forrest Stanley as Charles Wilder
- Tully Marshall as Roger Crosby
- Gertrude Astor as Cecily
- Flora Finch as Susan
- Arthur Edmund Carewe as Harry
- Martha Mattox as Mammy Pleasant, housekeeper
- George Siegmann as the Guard
- Lucien Littlefield as Dr. Ira Lazar
- Hal Craig as Policeman
- Billy Engle as Taxi Driver
- Joe Murphy as Milman

Production

The Cat and the Canary is the product of early 20th century German expressionism. According to art historian Joan Weinstein, expressionism is a loosely defined term that includes the art styles of Die Brücke and Der Blaue Reiter, cubism, futurism, and abstraction. The key element that connects these styles is the concern for the expression of inner feelings over verisimilitude to nature.[6] Film historian Richard Peterson notes that German cinema became famous for stories of psychological horror and for uncanny moods generated through lighting, set design and camera angles." Such filmmaking techniques drew on expressionist themes. Influential examples of German expressionist film include Robert Wiene's The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari (1920) about a deranged doctor and Paul Leni's Waxworks (1925) about a wax figure display at a fair.[3]

Waxworks impressed Carl Laemmle, the German-born president of Universal Pictures. Laemmle was struck by Leni's departure from expressionism by the inclusion of humor and playfulness during grotesque scenes.[5] Meanwhile, in the United States, D. W. Griffith's One Exciting Night (1922) began a Gothic horror film trend that Laemmle wanted to capitalize on; subsequent films in the genre like Alfred E. Green's now lost The Ghost Breaker (1922), Frank Tuttle's Puritan Passions (1923), Roland West's The Monster (1925) and The Bat (1926), and Alfred Santell's The Gorilla (1927)—all comedy horror film adaptations of Broadway stage plays—proved successful.[4][5]

Laemmle turned to John Willard's popular play The Cat and the Canary, which centered on an heiress whose family tries to drive her insane to steal her inheritance. Willard hesitated in permitting Laemmle to film his play because, as historian Douglas Brode explains, "that would have exposed to virtually everyone the trick ending, ... destroying the play's potential as an ongoing moneymaker." Nevertheless, Willard was convinced and the play was adapted into a screenplay by Alfred A. Cohn and Robert F. Hill.[6]

Casting

The Cat and the Canary features veteran silent film stars Laura La Plante, Creighton Hale, and Forrest Stanley. La Plante played roles in more than 50 films before starring in The Cat and the Canary.[7] According to film historian Gary Don Rhodes, her part in The Cat and the Canary was typical for women in horror and mystery films: "The female in the horror film ... becomes the hunted, the quarry. She has little to do, and so the question becomes 'What will be done with her?'" Rhodes adds, "The heroines are young and beautiful, but represent more a prize to be possessed—whether "stolen" by a villain or "owned" by a young hero at the films' conclusions."[8] Following The Cat and the Canary, La Plante maintained a career with Universal, but she is described as a "victim of talkies."[9] She received a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame before her death in 1996 from Alzheimer's disease.[10]

Universal chose Irish actor Creighton Hale to play hero Paul Jones, Annabelle's cousin. Hale had appeared in 64 silent films before The Cat and the Canary, notably the 1914 serial The Exploits of Elaine and D. W. Griffith's Way Down East (1920) and Orphans of the Storm (1921).[11] Hale's role in The Cat and the Canary was to provide comedic relief. According to critic John Howard Reid, "He is forever backing into furniture or finding himself in a risqué position under a bed or wrestling with stray objects like falling books or enormous bed-springs."[12] Hale had trouble finding a solid career in sound film. Many of his parts were minor and uncredited.[13]

The villain Charles Wilder was played by Forrest Stanley, an actor who had been cast in films such as Bava (1923), Through the Dark (1924) and Shadow of the Law (1926). After his performance in The Cat and the Canary, Stanley played lesser roles in films such as Show Boat (1936) and Curse of the Undead (1936) and the television series Alfred
The film contained a supporting cast referred to by one film historian as "second-rate" and "excellent" by another. Tully Marshall played the suspicious lawyer Roger Crosby, Martha Mattox was cast as the sinister and superstitious housekeeper Mammy Pleasant, and Gertrude Astor and Flora Finch played greedy relatives Cecily Young and Aunt Susan Sillsby, respectively. Lucien Littlefield was cast as deranged psychiatrist Dr. Ira Lazar who bore an eerie resemblance to Werner Krauss’s title character in The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari.

Directing

As Universal anticipated, director Paul Leni turned Willard’s play into an expressionist film suited to an American audience. Historian Bernard F. Dick observes that “Leni reduced German expressionism, with its weird chiaroscuro, asymmetric sets, and excessive stylization, to a format compatible with American film practice.” Jenn Dlugos argues that “many stage play movie adaptations [of the 1920s] fall into the trap of looking like ‘a stage play taped for the big screen’ with minimal emphasis on the environment and plenty of stage play overacting.” This, however, was not the case for Leni’s film. Richard Scheib notes that “Leni’s style is something that lifts The Cat and the Canary up and away from being merely a filmed stage play and gives it an amazing visual dynamism.”

Leni used similar camera effects found in German expressionist films such as The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari to set the atmosphere of The Cat and the Canary. The film opens with a hand wiping cobwebs away to reveal the title credits. Other effects include “dramatic shadows, portentous superimpositions and moody sequences in which the camera glides through corridors with billowing curtains.” Film historian Jan-Christopher Horak explains that a ‘matched dissolve’ from an image of the mansion and its oddly shaped towers to the oversized bottles of medicine that the dearly departed has been forced to consume functions as a double image of a prison, dwarfing the old man who sits alive with his will in a corner of the frame. Leni worked with the cast to add to the mood created by lighting and camera angles. Cinematographer Gilbert Warrenton recalled that Leni used a gong to startle the actors. Warrenton mused, “He beat that thing worse than the Salvation Army beat a drum.”

While the film contains elements of horror, according to film historian Dennis L. White it “is structured with an end other than horror in mind. Some scenes may achieve horror, and some characters dramatically experience horror, but for these films conventional clues and a logical explanation, at least an explanation plausible in hindsight, are usually crucial, and are of necessity their makers’ first concern.”

Besides directing, Leni was a painter and set designer. The sets of the film were designed by Leni and fabricated by Charles D. Hall, who later designed the sets of Dracula (1931) and Frankenstein (1931). Leni hoped to eschew realism for visual designs that reflected the emotions of characters. He wrote, “It is not extreme reality that the camera perceives, but the reality of the inner event, which is more profound, effective and moving than what we see through everyday eyes …” Leni went on to direct the Charlie Chan film The Chinese Parrot (1927), The Man Who Laughs (1928), and The Last Warning (1929) before his death in 1929 from blood poisoning.

Reception and influence

The film, according to Variety, “is a film which ought to be exhibited before many other directors to show them how a story should be told, for in all that he does Mr. Leni does not seem to strain at a point. He does it as naturally as a man twisting the ends of his mustache in thought.” Nonetheless, as film historian Bernard F. Dick points out, “Leni’s adroitly atmospheric film is virtually an ideogram of narrative suspension and impact.” Chris DashIELl states that “everything is so exaggerated, so lacking in subtlety, that we soon stop caring what happens, despite a few mildly scary effects”, although he admits that the film “had a great effect on the horror genre, and even Hitchcock cited it as an influence.” Tony Rayns has called the film “the definitive ‘haunted house’ movie …. Leni wisely plays it mainly for laughs, but his prowling, Murnau-like camera work generates a frisson or two along the way.” It is, in fact, hugely entertaining …”

Modern critics address the film’s impact and influence. Michael Atkinson of The Village Voice remarks, “[Leni’s] adroitly atmospheric film is virtually an ideogram of narrative suspension and impact.” Chris Dashiel states that “[e]verything is so exaggerated, so lacking in subtlety, that we soon stop caring what happens, despite a few mildly scary effects”, although he admits that the film “had a great effect on the horror genre, and even Hitchcock cited it as an influence.”

Although not the first film set in a supposed haunted house, The Cat and the Canary started the pattern for the "old dark house” genre.[32] The term is derived from English director James Whale’s The Old Dark House (1932), which was heavily influenced by Leni’s film,[16] and refers to “films in which murders are committed by masked killers in old mansions.”[83] Supernatural events in the film are all explained at the film’s conclusion as the work of a criminal. Other films in this genre influenced by The Cat and the Canary include The Last Warning, House on Haunted Hill (1959), and the monster films of Abbott and Costello and Laurel and Hardy.[34][35]

A tinted version produced by David Shepard, film preservationist, was released on both VHS and DVD in 1997 and 2005 by Image Entertainment. The 2005 “Special Edition” contains an original score by Franklin Stover. The original black-and-white version airs infrequently on the cable television network Turner Classic Movies.

In 2001, the American Film Institute nominated this film for AFI’s 100 Years...100 Thrills.[36]

Other film versions

The Cat and the Canary has been filmed five other times. Rupert Julian’s The Cat Creeps (1930) and the Spanish language La Voluntad del muerto (The Will of the Dead Man) directed by George Melford and Enrique Tovar Ávalos were the first talkie versions of the play; they were produced and distributed by Universal Pictures in 1930.[3] Although the first sound films produced by Universal, neither was as influential on the genre as the first film and The Cat Creeps is lost.[37]

The plot had become too familiar, as film historian Douglas Brode notes, and it “seemed likely the play would be put away in a drawer [indefinitely].”[6] Yet Elliott Nugent’s film, The Cat and the Canary (1939), proved successful[38][39] Nugent “had the inspired idea to openly play the piece for laughs.”[6] The film was produced by Paramount and starred comedic actor Bob Hope. Hope played Wally Campbell, a character based on Creighton Hale’s performance as Paul Jones. One critic suggests that Hope developed the character better than Hale and was funnier and more engaging.[12] In later years, Universal themselves acquired the rights to the 1939 version.

Other film adaptations include Katten och kanariefägel (The Cat and the Canary), a 1961 Swedish television film directed by Jan Molander and The Cat and the Canary (1979), a British film directed by Radley Metzger. The 1979 version was produced by Richard Gordon, who explains why he and Metzger made their film version: “Well, it hadn't been done since the Bob Hope version, it had never been done in color, it was a well-known title, had a certain reputation, and it was something that logically could or in fact should be made in England.”[40]

References

3. 1 2 3 4 5 Richard Peterson, liner notes, The Cat and the Canary (DVD, Image Entertainment, 2005).
16. 1 2 Clarens, Illustrated History of Horror, p. 57.
27. ↑ Mourad Hall, "Mr. Leni's Clever Film; 'Cat and Canary' an Exception to the Rule in Mutoscope Pictures", New York Times, September 15, 1927.
27. Mourdant Hall, “Mr. Leni’s Clever Film; ‘Cat and Canary’ an Exception to the Rule in Mystery Pictures”, New York Times, September 18, 1927, p. X5.
34. ↑ Miller, Horror Spoofs, pp. 2–3.
36. ↑ "AFI's 100 Years...100 Thrills Nominees" (PDF). Retrieved August 20, 2016.
37. ↑ Soister, Up from the Vault, p. 74.
Further reading

External links

- Wikiquote has quotations related to: The Cat and the Canary (1927 film)
- Wikimedia Commons has media related to The Cat and the Canary (1927 film).
- The Cat and the Canary at the Internet Movie Database
- The Cat and the Canary at Rotten Tomatoes
- The Cat and the Canary at Allmovie
- The Cat and the Canary is available for free download at the Internet Archive

Films directed by Paul Leni

Dr. Hart's Diary (1917) · The Mystery of Bangalore (1918) · The Conspiracy in Genoa (1921) · Backstairs (1921) · Waxworks (1924) · The Cat and the Canary (1927) · The Chinese Parrot (1927) · The Man Who Laughs (1928) · The Last Warning (1929)

Universal Monsters
The Mummy

Frankenstein

Frankenstein (1931) · Bride of Frankenstein (1935) · Son of Frankenstein (1939) · The Ghost of Frankenstein (1942)

Edgar Allan Poe

The Invisible Man

Werewolves

Crossovers

Frankenstein Meets the Wolf Man (1943) · House of Frankenstein (1944) · Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein (1948)

Ape Woman

Captive Wild Woman (1943) · Jungle Woman (1944) · The Jungle Captive (1945)

Inner Sanctum Mysteries

Calling Dr. Death (1943) · Weird Woman (1944) · Dead Man's Eyes (1944) · Strange Confession (1945) · Pillow of Death (1945)

Gill-man

Creature from the Black Lagoon (1954) · Revenge of the Creature (1955) · The Creature Walks Among Us (1956)

Other films

Remakes

Reboot series

The Mummy (2017)

---

Authority control

Wikipedia · VIAF: 305203693

This article is issued from Wikipedia - version of the 9/22/2016. The text is available under the Creative Commons Attribution/Share Alike but additional terms may apply for the media files.
The Cat and the Canary is a 1927 silent film about relatives of an eccentric millionaire who gather in his spooky mansion on the 20th anniversary of his death for the reading of his will. Directed by Paul Leni. Written by Alfred A. Cohn and Robert F. Hill, based on John Willard's 1922 play of the same name. Spooks! Thrills! Shrieks! Laughs! (taglines). Roger Crosby: I have come to read the will of Cyrus West. Have any of the heirs arrived yet? Mammy Pleasant: No, Mr. Crosby. [This] adroitly atmospheric film is virtually an ideogram of narrative suspension and impact, and it's a lovely, musty, nightened place to visit. October 20, 2014 | Full Review... Michael Atkinson. Village Voice. Top Critic. What makes Canary sing is Leni's pioneering mix of spooky expressionism and light comedy, fabulous camera work, and nice turns from Laura La Plante, Creighton Hale, and Martha Mattox. October 20, 2014 | Rating: A- | Full Review... Tim Purtell. Those who enjoy a thrilling tale of mystery that keeps them guessing right up to the end will delight in The Cat and the Canary. October 8, 2020 | Full Review... Mercury Staff. The Mercury (Australia). View All Critic Reviews (25). Audience Reviews for The Cat and the Canary. Dec 23, 2010. The Cat and the Canary (1927) is an American silent horror film adaptation of John Willard's 1922 black comedy play of the same name. Directed by German Expressionist filmmaker Paul Leni, the film stars Laura La Plante as Annabelle West, Forrest Stanley as Charles "Charlie" Wilder, and Creighton Hale as Paul Jones. The plot revolves around the death of Cyrus West, who is Annabelle, Charlie, and Paul's uncle, and the reading of his will 20 years later. Annabelle inherits her uncle's fortune, but when