A Music as Numerous as Space: Emily Dickinson, Landscape, and the Allure of the Performative

Nicole Panizza
Faculty Research Centre for Dance Research (CDaRE), School of Media and Performing Arts

Research output: Contribution to conference › Paper

Abstract
There has been much scholarly and artistic debate about Emily Dickinson, yet surprisingly little research has been done in relation to her musical training - and the critical role that music played in informing much of her literary oeuvre. Dickinson possessed a comprehensive knowledge of music, in both rudiment and performance. Her personal music folio contains scores that, in many instances, require not only an advanced piano technique and sophisticated level of performance and virtuosity, but also demonstrate a diverse representation of musical style and genre. Editorial markings found in many of these manuscripts support the notion that she was exposed to a sustained level of expert music instruction, notably during her formative years. Music is both the ground on which the superstructure of her poetic thought was built and a condition of being towards which it aspired.

With reference to Sally Bayley's Home on the Horizon: Space in America's Search for Space from Emily Dickinson to Bob Dylan (2013) and Cooley's The Music of Emily Dickinson's Poems and Letters (2003) this presentation serves as an investigation of Dickinson's intersections with music and performance: her own musical practice, her innovative use of musical device, metaphor and language as an expression of her connection to (and interaction with) exterior and interior space, and the role that performance personae and gesture played in her artistic consciousness. It is my wish that this research will ultimately serve as a model for future debate regarding Dickinson's relationship to music and how; via the process of performance, analysis and reflection it can bring her audience one step closer to a more vivid realisation of her life and work.

Original language
English

Pages
1-21

Number of pages
21

Publication status
Accepted/In press - 11 Aug 2017

Event
EDIS Critical Institute - Amherst College, Amherst, United States
Duration: 11 Aug 2017 → 11 Aug 2017
http://emilydickinsoninternationalsociety.org/node/508

Conference

Country
United States
City
Amherst
Period
11/08/17 → 11/08/17
Dive into the research topics of 'A Music as Numerous as Space: Emily Dickinson, Landscape, and the Allure of the Performative'. Together they form a unique fingerprint.

- Emily Dickinson
- Music
- Performance
- Musical Training
- Allure
- Music Instruction
- Bob Dylan
- Virtuosity

View full fingerprint

Research Output

Research Output per year

2018 - 2018

White Heat - Emily Dickinson in 1862: A Weekly Blog
Panizza, N. & Schweitzer, I., 26 Jun 2018
Research output: Practice-Based and Non-textual Research › Web publication/site

Open Access

Cite this

This poem is Emily Dickinson's method of stating that poetry is superior to prose, as it can access the imagination in ways that prose cannot. However, this means that the barriers of entry into her house are higher than that into a similar conceit in prose. However, it is, perhaps, more fulfilling for reader and poet alike. "I Dwell in Possibility"